SECURITY POLICY STATEMENT

Security is of prime importance to Fenwick Haulage LTD, and it is our policy to ensure that property and information are held secure within our operations and our people are protected, whilst safeguarding the integrity of high value product against loss by intentional destruction or theft.

Information relating to our customers and their property shall only be given to personnel who have a need to know. In this respect access to computers shall be restricted and, whilst vehicle drivers will be given all relevant information to enable them to complete their duties, it is their responsibility to keep this safe and not to disclose it to other personnel unless required by law.

The company LGVs are fitted with satellite tracking, mobile communications and panic buttons for the safety of both the driver and the security of the load.

The security of the loads shall be checked after loading, at the commencement of the journey and, where appropriate, at the convenient points during the journey. At journey breaks the vehicle shall be made secure prior to vacating it.

Access to sites will be controlled where such access is the responsibility of the company. In other instances, precautions shall be taken to prevent interference with the vehicles or loads.

Any person on site who is not known should be challenged as to why they are there, or you should immediately alert the office staff to an unauthorised presence.

Personnel are responsible for reporting actual or threatened breaches of security to senior management in the most expedient manner who, shall then investigate them and determine any action necessary to prevent recurrence. Be careful never to place yourself in danger, should you at any time feel threatened or in danger then immediately call the police on 999 or 112 if you are in the EU.

Everyone must be vigilant when it comes to security. If ever you notice anything out of the ordinary, then you must report it. Failure to do so could have serious consequences.
